WORKPLACE INSPECTION

Is your business compliant with safety legislation?

Workplace inspections highlight safety hazards in the workplace and assists the business to identify and resolve issues before an injury occurs.

The most effective review is one undertaken by an independent, qualified and competent safety professional. By undertaking a review of your workplace, you can identify opportunities to improve operational activities and performance and achieve real results to meet compliance.

What does a Workplace Inspection help to do?

Compliance to safety legislation - determine if workplace practices are meeting legislative requirements.

Hazards - Addresses issues such as (not limited to) confined space entry, working at heights, noise, plant, manual tasks and involve the inspection and testing of current workplace control methods.

This inspection identifies your business' critical risks and helps you to ensure these risks are managed so no one is harmed or injured.

What an inspection will tell you:

- How well you are performing in relation to health and safety;
- Whether your business leaders and workers are meeting the standards which the company has set itself;
- If you have effective processes in place to comply with the health and safety legislation;
- Critical risks that need immediate attention; and
- Opportunities for improvement with recommendations to improve business performance, safety culture and results.

What you'll get:

Four and a half (4 1/2) hours of safety consulting, inclusive of onsite attendance by a suitably competent and qualified safety professional and a prioritised action plan so you can start making improvements.

Identification of any significant safety liabilities associated with activities undertaken (including exposures associated with key regulatory requirements); and

A prioritised personalised Safety Action Plan.

It's recommended every workplace should conduct regular inspections of their workplace to identify hazards. Monitoring your processes and reviewing your workplace compliance is the most effective method to identify any uncontrolled critical risks before a costly incident arising.
